The Wrong Murderer

By HUGH CLEVELY

Milou shrugged his shoulders. Of course I want the liver I was want there, he remarked. And if you don't mind taking a job like that, I suppose I'll take it. Here you are, deliver it to Mr. Brown 137 Jamaica Road, Pennville, a few tonight. And good luck to you.

Mahony handed over the liver and received the note. He declined Milou's urgent invitation to come somewhere and have a drink and sit with him.

When Mahony was out of sight Milou entered the nearest telephone booth. The man he telephoned was Ambrose Lawson.

He fell for it all right, he said. That was all he said. Then he rang off.

Milou was not altogether right in saying that Mahony had fallen for it. At the beginning of the conversation Mahony had been ready to believe that he might have met Milou in the Shanghai Bar and forgotten meeting him.

Then there had come a little discrepancy in Milou's story—the mention of Kossoff. Mahony had never known Kossoff in Shanghai. But he had mentioned the name of Kossoff as a dope trafficker at the little that morning. And the fact that he had been a newspaper correspondent in China might easily be known to Lawson. Billy Boy might have mentioned it.

It occurred to Mahony that Lawson had put together all he knew about Mahony's career in China to try to lure him into a trap. Mahony intended to walk into that trap not blind and unaware but with his eyes open expecting trouble and ready for it. One precaution only he took. He wrote a note to Lee Ramsden telling him what he proposed doing and the address he was going to.

That note would reach Lee Ramsden by the first post in the morning, and Mahony asked Lee Ramsden to communicate with Inspector Kennedy if he should not find him up before eleven the same morning.

Just before 10 that night Mahony tapped at the door of 137 Jamaica Road which was a tall dingy tenement house. The door was opened by a bent shriveled old man who looked up at Mahony out of bleary eyes. Mahony handed him the note.

It was told to bring this here at 10 tonight, he said. The old man took the note and looked at Mahony suspiciously.

Wait here a minute, he said. He closed the front door. Mahony waited. After about half a minute the front door opened again and the old man beckoned Mahony inside. His manner this time was more civil and conciliatory.

Mr. Brown says you're to come in and wait in his room, he said. "He won't keep you longer than he can help."

Mahony's hand was in his coat pocket. He was ready for anything that might happen. But though he strained his ears to hear the slightest sound near him he could hear nothing except his own footsteps and those of the old man. The house seemed surprisingly silent almost deserted.

Cautiously every sense on the alert he followed the old man up a dark tumbledown staircase to a landing. The old man opened the door of a room.

Wait in here, said the old man. "Mr. Brown said to wait in here. You'll find him in the room. He's waiting for you."

He ushered Mahony into a room, but by contrast with the rest of the house was surprisingly well appointed and comfortable. The wall paper was clean and fresh there were a couple of comfortable arm chairs, a solid looking roll top desk, a good thick carpet, and on a mahogany table were whisky, soda glasses and a box of cigars.

Have a drink or a smoke if you feel like it, said the old man and he went out, closing the door after him. Mahony heard his slow foot steps going down the stairs.

Very puzzled Mahony glanced round the room. So far as he could see it appeared to be quite safe for the moment. The door was inaccessible from the road, the door was closed there were no apertures or ventilators in the wall through which he could be shot at. He had no doubt that he had now walked into the trap prepared for him but what was the nature of the trap? Was it in the drink or the cigars on the table?

Everything was very quiet except for the slow tick tick tick of a clock on one of the walls of the room. Minutes drag by very slowly when a man's nerves are strained and alert, waiting for something to happen. Five minutes passed ten minutes passed and still the house remained quite quiet.

Mahony smoked the cigarette and down the room he glanced cautiously at the articles on the desk. At last he saw it. He pulled at one of the drawers.

It opened and inside were a number of thin paper packets. One of the packets had burst slightly at one end and from it had spilled a little shiny white powder. Mahony wetted one finger slightly and tasted a tiny particle of the powder. The cold numb sensation on the end of his tongue told him instantly what the powder was. It was cocaine.

The silence of the house was suddenly broken. From down below at the front door came a sound of banging and then of men's rough voices in the hall. Mahony closed the drawer swiftly. He had no doubt that whatever was going to happen would happen now and he was ready and waiting for it.

There was a sound of footsteps on the stairs leading up to the room. Mahony stood leaning back against the mantelpiece in an easy attitude one hand in the pocket of his coat.

He was a very large man and very ugly. A shabby cap pulled down at an angle over one eye. He failed to conceal his shock of untidy red hair. His brow was low, his eyes were small and deep set, his lower jaw was underhung, like that of a bulldog.

He closed the door deliberately behind him and stood in front of the mantelpiece. A huge menacing figure.

Good evening to you Mr. Brown, he said with a kind of savage politeness. "I just called in for me money."

I'm not Mr. Brown, replied Mahony.

Are you not so? said the man.

He took a pace forward suddenly and brought his huge right fist down with a loud crack into the palm of his left hand.

What in hell do I care what you're calling yourself to-night? he roared ferociously. Isn't it enough trouble you're after causing me with the cops looking for me and all without standing there arguing the toss about what name you'd be pleased to? Give me fifty quid and let me go—or have I got to squeeze the money out of you with my bare hands?

It was obvious that he was in a real Irish temper, nothing would have pleased him better than a fight. The last thing Mahony wanted was a fight with a stranger at that moment.

Don't be a damned fool, he said sharply. I've told you I'm not Mr. Brown. I'm waiting for him myself.

The Irishman made a gesture of disgust.

Do you think you'll wriggle out of paying me that way? he roared. I'm clucking! he demanded angrily. Didn't the old fellow below tell me you was here?

But Terence has to fight tomorrow.

Reaction

WITH ALL respect to the new law, the reaction of the public is a matter of opinion. It is a matter of opinion because the law is new and the public is not used to it.

The law is new and the public is not used to it. It is a matter of opinion because the law is new and the public is not used to it. It is a matter of opinion because the law is new and the public is not used to it.

Local Option

A majority of residents in 838 of Ohio's 1,240 townships already have voted to ban the sale of liquor. At the coming election half a hundred more will vote on the question. There is a possibility that two-thirds of the state's townships may be dry for a year.

This is normal operation of the privilege of local option which was one of the vital sections of the state constitution law enacted after repeal of the 18th amendment to the Constitution. Yet in many cases Ohioans are surprised to learn that so large a geographic portion of their state has banned the sale of liquor.

In some cases the force behind the vote was the dry sentiment of the voters. Significantly in other cases it has been an unwillingness of townships and municipal divisions to put up with the nuisance of liquor establishments in residential neighborhoods. The problem of the intoxicated automobile driver and the renewed activity of prohibition organizations are additional factors.

On the whole the result seems to be satisfactory. Beer, wine and liquor have been made available. The states experiment with prohibition has been reasonably successful. However, the public is not yet used to the new law. It is a matter of opinion because the law is new and the public is not used to it.

Local option has proved to be a safety valve for the prohibitionists without turning out to be a club against the anti-prohibitionists. When it is recalled that only a few years ago one of the foremost public questions was the manufacture and sale and consumption of alcoholic beverages there is reason to believe and to hope that for the time being an issue has been put on the shelf.

With Reservations

Greetings to Gen. Francisco Franco named dictator of Spain by the insurgents on Thursday must be hedged about with reservations.

The insurgents do not control Spain. They will not control it until the ovalls have stopped fighting. That may be some time. Therefore Gen. Franco is dictator of the Spanish insurgents not of Spain. There is a difference.

Furthermore, being a dictator even of one of two contending forces in a civil war is no sinecure. No doubt there are Spanish insurgents who would rather take orders from someone else. If there don't happen to be any insurgents who feel that way now, there will be some later.

In the last place because a dictator gets to be that way by virtue of the fact that he is a strong man with strong support, meaning money, men and guns, he must continue to have more money, men and guns than anyone else controls in order to keep on being a dictator. Many a potential dictator has come to grief on the item of overhead.

Gen. Franco may handle these problems without any trouble. The insurgents may win a clean-cut victory and he may take his place alongside Josef Stalin, Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini. Just in case.
